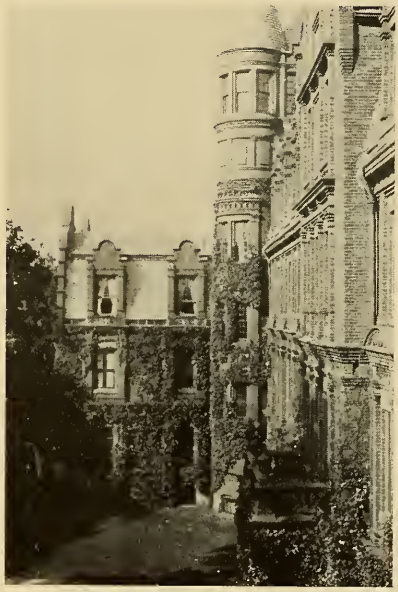
Review of the Year

This has been an important year in the history of Wellesley, architecturally and relationally. The new dormitory, Severance Hall, on Tower Court hill, has been completed. This building was begun during the summer of 1925 with the financial aid received through the semi-centennial fund, and is similar in style to Tower Court and Claflin Hall. The cornerstone of Severance Hall was laid by President Pendleton in the spring of 1926, and the building was named for Miss Anne-Belle Severance, who donated the largest sum of money for its construction. The occupants of Stone Hall moved into Severance Hall on February the ninth, 1927, when the dormitory was formally opened. Mrs. Ewing is the house-mother. The new botany building, between the observatory and the green house, is, likewise, fast nearing completion. The fire in Stone Hall on March 7 caused plans for its renovation to be abandoned. It will be demolished and a new dormitory erected on the site.



There has been one especially noteworthy attempt made to raise more money for the semi-centennial fund, this year. Wellesley held a fashion show under the auspices of William Filene's Sons Company and the Wellesley College Press Board, and charged twenty-five cents admission. The proceeds went to the fund.

Wellesley's relations with the intellectual world have been decidedly stimulating. The departments of Philosophy, French, Art, Reading and Speaking, have presented particularly interesting programs by visiting lecturers and artists. The department of Philosophy began its series of lectures on October 5th, with one by Professor Sarvapelli Radhakrishnan, on "Early Buddhism, and its Relation to the Upanishads." Professor Radhakrishnan is the professor of Mental and Moral Science in the University of Calcutta, India. The second outside lecturer was Professor R. F. A. Hoernle, formerly of Harvard, now of South Africa, who spoke at Wellesley on November 12th, on the subject, "The Influence of the Theory of Evolution on Contemporary Philosophy." Perhaps the most famous lecturer, however, was Professor Etienne Gilson, Professor of Mediaeval Philosophy at the Sorbonne, and exchange professor at Harvard. He is internationally known as an authority on mediaeval philosophy. He lectured twice at Wellesley, once under the combined auspices of the French and Philosophy departments, on November 30, on the subject, "The Evolution and Meaning of Mediaeval Philosophy." (Professor Gilson's second visit was made especially to the French department). Among the last lectures of the year were two, on February 28 and March 1, by Professor Pratt on, "Modern Buddhism." These talks were in some measure a supplement to the first lecture of the year, by Professor Radhakrishnan.

The French department invited Professor Gilson to lecture on January 10, on the subject, "L'Université de Paris, au Treizième Siècle." And on January 18, M. Jacques Copeau spoke to the French department, or rather he read "L'Annonce Faite à Marie." M. Copeau is the founder of the theater du Vieux Colomber, Paris. The play he read was one which has been translated into English under the title, "The Tidings Brought to Mary," and was presented by the Theater Guild of New York City, several years ago. The author of the play, Paul Claudel, is the newly appointed French ambassador to the United States.

LEGENDA

Wellesley was extremely fortunate in the visit, on December 3, of Professor Gilbert Murray, Regius Professor of Greek at the University of Oxford. He lectured on The Eumenides of Aeschylus. Professor Murray emphasized especially his own interpretation of the significance of The Eumenides, that "ultimate justice is to be found in an appeal from a law to a person." Professor Murray also said that this conception "sought to make religion humane at the expense of making it anthropomorphic." The lecture was one of singular lucidity and convincing illustration; a memorable experience for all his audience.

The Art department has had several interesting exhibits in the Farnsworth museum. There were successive exhibits in October, November, and December, of the works of Henry Boies Brainard, Celesto Celestini, and Virginia Litchfield. There was an especially good exhibition, during the month of January, of reproductions of the work of the moderns. Copies of the paintings of Renoir, Matisse, Picasso, Marie Laurencin, and Marin, were all included in this collection. On January 26, Professor Alfred Barr, of the Art department, gave a most instructive gallery lecture. This talk was of special value to those of his audience who were unacquainted with the purposes and methods of modern art. From the end of February until the middle of March there was an all college loan to the Farnsworth museum, followed by a very valuable and finely exhibited collection of the etchings of Mrs. Ramburgh.

There were six poets' readings this year. The first was by Abbie Farwell Brown, on October 4. Then, on October 12, Margaret Widdemer read several of her poems. Countee Cullen came to us this year on October 19th, and this time he read us some of his work. Jeannette Marks followed, on October 26, and Arthur Guiterman on November 2. Mr. Guiterman read several characteristic and delightful poems of everyday life, which appeal so strongly because of the humorous quirks. The final reading of the season was on November 9, by Miss Anna Hempstead Branch.

The department of Reading and Speaking, likewise, arranged a delightful series of readings and recitals. The first reading came on November 9, when Miss Dorothea Spinney read The Medea. Ruth Draper came again this year, on December 1, and gave us an utterly charming program of her original character sketches. She acted several of her classics, including "The Three Breakfasts," and "A Southern Girl at a Dance." She also varied her customary repertoire with her incomparable "Italian Lesson," "The Factory Girl," and "The German Teacher."

The college lecture committee was also active this year and contributed a moving picture as well as lectures. One of the most interesting lectures of the year was by Miss Lucy Gardner, on October 28. Miss Gardner is an Englishwoman, a guest of the World Alliance for International Friendship, who has been connected with social, industrial, and reform movements in Great Britain. She spoke earnestly and stimulatingly on the Christian Social movement. The moving picture referred to above, was a splendid photo-dramatization of Grass, the story of the semi-annual migration of a central Asiatic tribe, illustrating man's will to live under almost insurmountable difficulties.

The music department must not be omitted from a list of those active intellectually. During the fall there was a series of organ recitals, and in March a Beethoven Commemoration.

Tree Day

Tree Day, this year, is a Russian peasant fair. The story element lies solely in the grouping of the pageant. And in order to make the arrangement possible as a motif, the time of entrance of the Tree Day mistress and her aides had to be changed from the traditional beginning of the program to the middle. A further change, or rather a reversion to an old custom, is the presentation of the Tree Day pageant on Tower Court green, this year, instead of on the guest house lawn. And Tree Day is "open" for seniors this year.

The aim in the plan of the pageant is unity. One theme is to "inform" the whole scheme; Tree Day is to be a design, not a mere succession of pictures. This unity does not necessarily involve repetition, but rather an harmonious subordination. The music and costumes are being similarly planned.

The pageant opens with the entrance of a crowd of Russian peasants. They are greeted by the buffoons—the members of one of the side show companies—who fix the mass movement and centralize attention. This side show company acts out the sad love affair of the puppet, Petrouchka, for the Maid who is seduced by the glistening Moor. This side show is greatly analogous, in its bizarre humor, to our Punch and Judy show. After this dance, several of the peasants—three men and six girls—do a simple country dance, which establishes the mood and defines the motif. The ensuing entrance of the Tree Day mistress and her aides is spectacular in its contrasting dignity and austerity. The Tree Day mistress is the lady of the manor, and the aides are her ladies-in-waiting. Thus, the court becomes the nucleus of the pageant, instead of the customary extra and rather awkward group. Two guards, with halberds, clear the way for the lady of the manor. The crowd draws aside, eagerly centering its attention on her, although somewhat restrained by her presence. Suspense orders the crowd, while the merchants and people of importance in the community follow her to a throne which has been placed for her. The freshman Tree Day mistress, a peasant girl, greets her with fruit and grain—the gifts of the villagers. Then, a group of cossacks do a dashing whip dance, and one detaches himself from the rest, and does the traditional dagger dance. The lady of the manor and her attendants thus become spectators, and the buffoons recover the atmosphere of gaiety with a dance, and a man with a trained bear further amuses the crowd. Then the peasants, restored to their normal geniality, entertain themselves with a peasant dance done in couples, and called the "Wanyka-Tanyka." In the peasant crowds, is a sullen group of gypsies, sitting together throughout the fair. Several of them begin to strum on their zithers. This music insinuates itself into the consciousness of the gypsies, and they, stimulated by the peculiarly climactic effect of the increasingly tense, thin, notes, dance in a rush of excitement. They whirl madly, reach a frenzied pitch, then stop abruptly and scatter sulkily. The buffoons, in order to clear the atmosphere, urge the village maidens to dance. These acquiesce, and dance, first, in a group. Then, by a slow elimination, an audience is formed, and the two best dancers remain in the center. These two compete, and the winner is the freshman Receiver of the Spade. The lady of the manor makes the award, and her page, the Giver of the Spade, presents the spade.

The order of the dances, as can be seen from the above account, is planned for as much contrast and relief as possible, yet always retaining the heavy, moving crowd as the motif. The crowd consists of the dancers, and approximately twelve extra people, (who are in character—children, old people, Tartars—in order to provide onlookers and costume variety), and, also, groups about each dance to give continuity and motion. There is a certain unity even in the contrasts. The swift, sudden cossack and gypsy excitement, strikes the heavy peasant atmosphere without breaking it, for the strong, surging, peasant tone even permeates the cossack and gypsy madness. The reliefs give emphasis and perspective; they are not separate motifs. Throughout the fair, there is a persistent, strong, and peasant motion.

The music used in Tree Day produces, of course, the same effect as the dancing. The committee has used, as far as possible, arrangements and orchestrations of old folk tunes, or such modern music as is derived from the folk tunes. For example, the music for the first dance of the side show company (which acts "Petrouchka and the Maid and the Moor") is the modern ballet of Strawinsky, entitled, Petrouchka. Another of Strawinsky's compositions, L'Oiseau de Feu, is being used for the dance of the maidens at the end, so that Strawinsky opens and closes the program. Other modern ballets are, likewise, being played, for example, the Danse des Bouffons, by Prokofiev, for the dance of the buffoons. Another use of modern arrangement is the work of Liadoff, for the "Wanyka-Tanyka." Selections from Moussorgski's Boris Goudonoff, are played for the entrance of the Tree Day mistress and her aides. The orchestra, of fifteen people, was organized under the direction of Mr. Piston of Harvard.

The costumes are likewise planned with the peasant motif. There is emphasis on color, chiefly. Red dominates. Attempts have been made, however, for contrast—for instance, the brilliant blue and silver costume worn by the senior Tree Day mistress. There is the same heightened tone in the blue as in the red, but a variation from the sameness of color. The gypsies add a bizarre note, and the cossacks are equally strange and surprising with their gleaming daggers. These reliefs, of course further stress the underlying peasant theme. There is a wide range of headdress. There are the crowns worn by the ladies of the nobility, the little caps of the peasants with their ribbons and streamers, and the shakos—the tall hats of the cossacks.

This is the first year that there has been any attempt at artificial decoration. Formerly, the natural background of the trees and lawn have been the only things used. This year there is a scenic effect suggestive of booths at a fair. A particular effort is being made to convey the cheap flimsiness and ornate tawdriness of such a fair, and to imply its multitudinous variety.

Selected Poems From the Class of 1927

Songs of Conachur

Timorously I held you in my hands,
  A babe of dangerous and fragile art.
You would have slipped like the laconic sands
  If I had spread my fingers wide apart.
They told me that you bore the darkening marks
  Of trouble on the fragile root of you,
That in you lay the sweet, soft-hissing sparks
  Which would become a troublous flame of blue.
Then curiosity, that crooked bloom,
  Twisted within the hollows of my soul,
And choked the space which should have caused your doom,
  Letting the sparks flare softly in the bowl.
I could so easily have saved my heart
If I had spread my fingers wide apart!

Oh, silver motif in my tired night.
  Woven with sadness at its blackened rim,
Draw close your strands about me, softly tight!
  Day's unrelenting pallor comes to dim
The somber glory of you on my face;
  Draw close your strands to leave some imprint there
Which death can but reveal, and not erase!
  Leave then the mark of hatred, shameful, bare,
Long-loved one, turn the dearness of your eyes
  On the remorseless fevers of my heart,
Torture my hands still groping in the skies
  With you and I eternally apart!
Was ever there as impotent a thing
As I who loved and chanced to be a king!

M. L. Hopkins, '23.

Tree Lace

Upon the shoulder of the hill there lay a long black scarf
Of trees, whose knotted branches swirled
In grotesque patterns cross the sky.
Mantilla like, it lay on high;
As by a senorita furled
Across the lovely rose tints of her skin.

Among the meshes of the swirling lace was caught
An evening star whose white hot fire
Burned like a living jewel;
And trembled when the cool
North wind tossed the tree lace higher
As if she drew a long and quivering breath.

Georgia Hodges, '24.

Pleiades

Sisters so fair, do you never tire,
Dancing from dark to dawn?
Is there no dimming the cold white fire
Plucked from the strings of Apollo's lyre,
Flame that is keen as a keen desire,
Deep from the heart outdrawn?

Blue are the halls where you slip away
Under the western hill;
Where you may linger the golden day,
Decking your hair with a comet's ray,
Ready to dance when the dusk is grey,
Laughing as maidens will.

Pleiades fair, let your garments trail,
Floating adown the west;
Gliding with you on the meshes frail,
Come, blind the moon with a starry veil!
Then let me follow, when skies grow pale,
In halls of the gods to rest.

Mary Cleveland Bostwick, '25.

Miriam's Unsaid Speech

"Mercy, child, how young you are;
I wish my 'teens were not so far."

Ten thousand years behind me lie,
Years of fearful misery;
One hundred centuries of sorrow
Grind their way into my marrow.
Out of the desert my people come,
And out of the lands that were their home;
Out of Cairo, out of Spain,
Out of Holland's level plain,
Out of England's foggy streets,
With varied tongues but like heart-beats.
One was stretched on the cruel rack;
One was burned in a heaped straw-stack;
And a hundred years back farther yet
Stands the stark gallows' silhouette.
Many knew the hunger gripe,
And the gnawing knowledge that harp nor pipe
Nor lute nor zither can strum away,
For the future held no brighter day.

Woman with the idle tongue,
What avails it being young?

Judith Stern, '25.

To One Wise

And you were very kind
As I remember now.
One wise is hard to find,
And you were very kind.

The heart yields to the mind
In time—I forget how,
And you were very kind
As I remember now.

Louise Wilson, '26.

Music

There where the foaming spray is born of sea,
'Midst swish of waves and wail of wind I heard
A symphony of muted melody,
A chord unstruck, a sound afar that stirred
My soul; the music rose and fell as waves
Retreat, or sweep upon the shore once more,
And merged with winds and fleeing clouds in graves
Of dreams that haunt, and if to haunt to soar.
What is music? The winds in clouds or trees,
The rain on hills, or snow that falls in spring,
The moonbeam's song to stars, or nights to dawn,
My love for you, my friend; no none of these,
But all the sounds that hidden fairies sing,
And rippling laughter, fairy chimes withdrawn.

Phyllis Barthman,'26.

The Things You Say

Your love is like a hammered tray
Bearing gay silks—the things you say.
But if the silks were shown without
The tray, hung separately about,
They would look dull—a muslin lie.
I fear they would not catch my eye.

Helen Kaufmann, '26.

March Song

Bitterness makes better songs
  Than the songs of jest,
Sunshine seen through gray rain
  Glances best.

Gaiety's a wanton
  Smiling in the sun,
Bright hair faded
When the day's done.

But sorrow's a companion
  Faithful for a life,
Playing minor 'cello tunes
  Or a shrill fife.

The songs she sings are sad songs,
  Willow garlanded.
I was born with sorrow's
  Songs in my head.

Leaf bottomed creek,
  With a gay tenor sound,
I only heard a low note
  Running underground.

Frieze of molded bodies
  With the rhythm of the sea,
I only saw a line running
  To eternity.

My swift shooting-star moments
  Let me laugh to no avail,
Inevitably follows
  A slower comet's tail.

And when I would dance
  In a gay crimson shawl,
Plodding, dun homespun
  Covers me all.

Songs-in-the-head, songs-in-the-head,
  Why should they be sad songs,
With green paths to tread,
  Crocus garlanded?

Tea Leaves

The Love-tired Moon

Pau, pretty maid, of love was tired soon,
And cried out, "Well know I your whiteness, Moon."

Madame Lin Gambles

And taking many winnings Madame Lin
Said, "He who can afford to lose must win."

The Gateman Beats His Wife

"While knowledge taught by kindness is most good,"
The Gateman said, "It ill befits my mood."

Louise Wilson, '26.

Insufficient

"Time will kill your pain," he said to her.
Tired creed,
That she remembered late when he had gone,
She had need,
Ever since, she has collected hours,
Gathered time,
Dedicated sodden prose to him,
Or a rhyme,
She hears the many years in the creak
Of the stair,
Sees them in the empty rooms, in the color
Of her hair.
But she has not had time enough, she says,
None to spare.

Helen Kaufmann, '26.

Nanking Baby

I've never seen the world at all
That lies beyond our court-yard wall,
But I have heard the venders cry
And camel bells, and carts roll by;
And stranger sights and sounds I know
Must pass, for amah told me so.
The gateman smokes and smiles at me,
But never lets the gate swing free:
So I will wait, and will not tell
Until some vender comes to sell;
And while he barters, brags, and begs,
I'll view the world between his legs.

Dorothy Williams, '27.

Intrusion

Your face is a passionate pain
  In my heart and my mind;
You are dim, and fragile, and far,
  And my vision seems blind.

I strain with my thought to evoke,
  I imploringly ask
For your face, all shadowed and worn
  With the flame and the task.

Your years are upon you as frost
  On the fall's purple leaf,
But your spirit has drunk of the tears
  Of a star-blazoned grief.

Your soul is of crystal spun thin,
  With a tremulous gleam;
Its design is the sorrows of men
  With a strand of their dream.

I strain with my thought to evoke
  The flame which was burning
In the shadow of your eyes, where my spirit
  Is vainly returning.

Your body is bruised, but your soul
  Is winged and aflame.
You have slipped through the mists, and they say
  You are only a name.

M. L. Hopkins, '27.

Love Comes

I have looked for Love in the valley;
He has never been there, they say.
And the winter winds keep moaning,
And all I can hear is the groaning
Of their wild, shrill voice of moaning.
Love has not been that way.

I have searched all over the mountain
For his footsteps in the snow.
And I look before and behind me,
But the glimmering hilltops blind me,
And my own footsteps behind me
Are the only ones that I know.

I have stood on the frozen lake-beach
And watched for his sail at sea,
But the waters are still and buried,
And winter, serene, unhurried,
Holds the ship of Love ice-buried
Ten million miles from me.

O voice of the winds in the valley,
Grow still and forget to sing!
Snow, melt on the mountain passes;
Love follows the new green grasses.
Laugh, sea, that the sail-ship passes
You by like a bird on wing.
O Love, the eyes of my weary heart
Are weeping for the spring.

Ellen Douglas Gordon, '27.

Ritratto Di Vecchio

Like the stirring of spring in the leaves
Is a lovely face,
Like the sweeping of wind through the rain
In a desolate place.

Ruth Elizabeth Campbell, '27.

From An Old Chinese Saying

He who has laughed dies in a mirthless moaning,
He who has dreamed lies in a dreamless sleep.
He who has yearned is satiate with owning.
He who was glad would weep, but cannot weep.

He who has known is schooled by fools and semblance,
He who has dared fears not and cannot dare.
Time holds a balance in all shifting sequence
Startling of wings, a wave crest poised in air.

What then is man that dared and laughed these moments?
What is the flowing of the wave that seemed?
It is the life which contemplates and comments.
Its realness is to know that once it dreamed.

College Government

College Government has been actively legislative this year in domestic as well as foreign affairs. Amendments to the constitution of the association were proposed with the threefold purpose of better representation, simplification, and a diminution of the burden of legislation on the college at large. These results have been effected through the abolition of the House of Representatives, and a concentration of all legislative and executive power in the Senate. The new Senate consists of the President of the College or her deputy, four faculty and administration members, and eight students. In order to facilitate intercourse between the Senate and the student body, there is an "elastic committee" with the eight student members of the Senate as its nucleus, and any other students interested in the discussion at hand.

The formation of the Curriculum Committee to gather statistics of student opinion about academic affairs, and to make suggestions concerning changes or improvements has constituted the second innovation by College Government. The Committee sent out questionnaires to the Juniors and Seniors concerning Freshman Mathematics and English Composition, required Biblical History and Modern Languages. The statistics showed that required Mathematics for Freshmen was overwhelmingly defeated, unless it was offered with an alternative such as History 103. English Composition 102 was likewise abolished, but Biblical History retained its present form.

Discussion of the smoking rule, the seven-thirty law, graded privileges, and the Village Junior system has also taken place. Graded privileges were definitely defeated; the smoking rule and the Village Junior system have not been changed; students are permitted to take the seven-thirty train from Boston to Wellesley on Saturday evenings.

Wellesley sent representatives to the Women's Intercollegiate Student Government Association held in Washington, D. C. Representatives from Vassar, Holyoke, Smith, Bryn Mawr, and Wellesley discussed seceding from the larger organization to form the "Big Five" which would parallel to association of the "Big Five" college presidents. Nothing was decided, but Wellesley did join the National Student Federation.

Other College Government activities include the establishment of Current Event talks on Monday mornings, the institution of campus policing, and the sponsoring of a European tour conducted by foreign students.

Students' Aid

The Students' Aid Society is an intercollegiate organization with a committee of faculty and one of students in each college. The Wellesley branch has made several changes in its program this year, because of the higher price of tuition in Wellesley College, beginning this year. The cost of board and tuition for the college year has been raised from eight hundred dollars to one thousand dollars. The Students' Aid Committee decided, therefore, to change the date of its annual drive from October or November to March. This postponement will probably ensure larger returns for the drive, since the Freshman class will have a more accurate idea of the cause which it is supporting. It is hoped that heightened realization will be attended by increased contribution. The committee is depending on the class of 1927, as well as on the Freshman class. The Seniors are expected to lead the campaign with a one hundred per cent membership. Two members of the faculty committee, Miss Paige and Miss Willis, are planning the campaign.

The customary and annual reports are likewise being made this year, by the office, and the records show that contributions have been coming in spasmodically.

Christian Association

Christian Association at Wellesley in a quietly efficient manner sponsors many important movements and occasions in the College year. The incoming Freshmen are met by Christian Association "Ask Me" girls, directed around campus by glaring, but efficient placards, and entertained by a tea and vaudeville under the auspices of Christian Association. Throughout the year, meetings with special speakers are held in the village on every Wednesday night. The membership of the Christian Association in the Freshman class alone, this year, is three hundred.

The variety in the wide field of the Christian Association work can be seen in a mere enumeration of some of the most important departments. An Employment Bureau in the Christian Association office is of much assistance to girls who need or want to earn some money during the college year. Local people who want the services of college girls tell Christian Association about it, and the girl who will fill the position may be found in the files of the C. A. office. College maids find their horizon and opportunities enlarged under the care of C. A. The maids use a Christian Association library, are entertained at a party, may attend classes taught by students, of which typewriting is particularly popular, and attend the rehearsals of Barnswallows' Association by the arrangement of C. A., who asks students to take the maids' places at the telephone and door bell. The student-faculty luncheons, which have been popular and successful, are also under the patronage of Christian Association. The Conference Department has arranged for Wellesley delegates to attend three important conferences, the Milwaukee, Silver Bay, and Northfield conferences. Sunday School teachers are instructed by the Department of Religious Education and are trained to take their places in the local churches. Sunday Vespers, held usually twice a month, are arranged for by Christian Association. Among the speakers who came to Wellesley this year to speak at the Sunday Vespers have been Dr. Tweedy and Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving.

The field of the Christian Association work has included a very interesting contact between College girls and women actually in industry. A small group of College girls interested in economic and social problems meet during several week ends a year with some girls working in the shoe industry in Brockton. The two groups discuss a subject of which the College girls have made a preliminary study in their economic courses, and which the Brockton girls have studied in actual experience.

Intercollegiate Community Service Association

The Intercollegiate Community Service Association is an organization for social service work, having a wide intercollegiate membership. It is directed by a standing committee of undergraduates and alumnae chosen from the various colleges. This committee holds two or three meetings a year. Each college in the association has its own separate organization and order of activity. At the first meeting of the year at Wellesley—a mass meeting of all those interested in I. C. S. A. work—it was decided that in previous years the Wellesley chapter had not been a sufficiently compact unit, and that this year a particular effort would be made to effect closer co-operation. As a means to this end, it was decided to hold more meetings, and to have special reports made by the various workers explaining the problems and conditions in their particular fields. In this way, each member would gain a general knowledge of the several activities of the association.

Wellesley's social work consists largely in volunteer service. The five special branches in which we have workers are: hospitals, settlement houses, home libraries, family welfare work, and the Girl Scout organization. The clinical work is done largely in Boston and Newton, and ranges from weighing babies to amusing crippled children. The work done in the settlement houses—Dennison and Norfolk House Center and Lincoln House—is, for the most part, with adolescent girls, and takes the form of discussion, physical education, or amusement groups. The home library worker receives approximately fifteen books from the Children's Aid Society of Boston, and starts a circulating library in the home of one of the fifteen girls in her club. The girls range, in age, from about eight years to fifteen years. The twofold purpose of this work is to stimulate thought as well as interest in books, in the children. Every effort is made to develop a critical sense. And within two months the verdict on Little Women has been known to advance from "wonderful" to "penetrating." The family welfare work is largely investigation. The Girl Scout work is well known. Miss Conant delivered a series of lectures, in February, for the I. C. S. A. and the Girl Scouts.

The committee which directed the dressing of the Christmas dolls deserves special mention, since this is the most successful year so far. They distributed five hundred dolls to fourteen different agencies.

The Debating Club

For several years now, debating has been out of fashion. Barnard, recognizing the general lack of interest in its club, has dropped debating from its list of activities. Wellesley feels the same lassitude in its student body, and it is for this reason that the debating club dissolved itself this year. At the beginning of the year, the officers realized the college's indifference to debating, and decided to make a final attempt to bring it back again, into the college foreground. A particular effort was made to attract and hold the audience. The method included a definite minimizing of formalism in presentation, a reduction of technical diction and statistical statement, and an effort to deal with the larger issues of a question instead of capitalizing pedantic distinctions.

An effort was likewise made to stimulate more interest among the debaters themselves. Instead of holding the customary debate between the Freshmen and Sophomores as an end in itself, the club decided to use it as an elimination contest—the winner of which was to debate with the winning team at Radcliffe. This intercollegiate bait attracted more candidates for the teams, and stirred them to more intensive work. The subject of the Freshman-Sophomore debate was, "Resolved, That Debating Be Abolished at Wellesley." The Freshmen, who took the negative side, won, and were thus eligible to debate at Radcliffe. The Wellesley Freshmen and the Radcliffe Freshmen argued the question, "Resolved, That Student Government in Colleges Should Be Abolished." Wellesley held the affirmative view.

The college team, likewise, had a schedule entirely compatible with the new standards of the club. The society has been emphatic in its endeavor to combine special method with popular manner, and has distinctly animated Wellesley's intercollegiate relations. This year, for the first time, Wellesley debated with Yale. The question was, "Resolved, That Co-education, Similar to that in State Colleges, is Advisable for all Eastern Colleges." The speakers on the Wellesley team were Frances Furber, '27, (president of the club), and Jean Trepp, '29. They argued for the affirmative. It was the vote of the noteworthily large audience, which gave the victory to Yale.

Despite the efforts at arousing interest in debating, the college continued uninterested, and the club felt that it was a superfluous organization. The Wellesley Debating Club, therefore, abolished itself on March 6, 1927.

Clubs

One of the most valuable groups at college, which thrives on the minimum amount of publicity, is the language group. The Alliance Francaise, whose membership is large in proportion to the strong current interest in the French language, tries not only to increase fluency of French speech among the members, but also, to imbue a sense of French culture and the wide importance of the contributions of France to the civilization and development of the world. Six meetings are held each year in various society houses. The programs, this year, included a talk on Morocco by Mademoiselle Brechaille, visiting professor on the Wellesley French faculty. The Christmas meeting was particularly interesting because of the singing of old and unusual Christmas carols, some from Provence, and others from Poitou.

The Deutscher Verein, which sprang into existence last spring has the staggering purpose of getting acquainted with German language, literature, and culture. The members of the Deutscher Verein want both the social and intellectual background of German literature. One of the most valuable of the six meetings was that addressed by Dr. Fritz Kellermann of the Harvard German Department, who spoke of German life and character. This meeting of the Deutscher Verein was held jointly with the German Club of Harvard. At the opening meeting of the Deutscher Verein, songs were sung, and Max Habicht played the accordion and sang Swiss folk songs. At the Christmas meeting, to understand the old German joy in the Christmas season, there was an informal party at which carols were sung, and cookies offered the members by St. Nicholas. Within the Deutscher Verein there is a small group of more advanced students who meet and discuss German literature under the guidance of the German faculty.

The Circolo Italiano, as do the other language clubs, combines fun and instruction in the proper proportions to have the members not only acquire more knowledge of all things Italian, but want to acquire this knowledge. The three meetings held this year show the variety in which the desirable information may be served to the palate of the average college student. At the first meeting Miss Vacchelli gave an illustrated lecture on the city of Pisa. This informal lecture was followed by a talk by Miss Jackson on "The Fountains of Rome." At the last meeting of the year, Scampolo by Dario Nicodemi was given. This comedy of a "ragazzo" gave many members an opportunity to share in the program.

The Circulo Castellano, which tries to round out the formal study of the Spanish language, has a special feature of giving plays at meetings. Short plays are produced with much enthusiasm by the members, and an open play is given in the spring. Miss De Oyarzabal guides the ambitious actors and critics. At the Christmas meeting there was a lecture on Christmas in Spain followed by an informal singing of Spanish carols.

Departing from the more specialized interest in one country, the Liberal Club has been formed to study the current events of the nations, and the great modern movements of interest. As a criticism of the college girl's tendency to be bound up in local matters, the Liberal Club is interested in vital and powerful developments of current history. Two meetings are held each month, and one member is chosen chairman of the evening. Anyone may come to the meetings of the Liberal Club. A preliminary report of current events is followed by definite topical discussion. The discussion on Mussolini and the Italian situation was one of the most successful events of the year.

The Music Club, which holds a meeting on every other Friday night, always opens the program with supper served at six o'clock. Then comes the more serious work of the evening, the recital of the amateur artist. The chairman of the music committee arranges the program. Trios, quartets, solos, and chorus singing show the different phases of the study of the Music Club. When a meeting is felt to be especially profitable, it is open to the public. Most of the talent of the Music Club is concentrated on the voice and the piano, but there are a number of ambitious violinists and 'cellists.

The Mathematics Club, whose existence never fails to be a wonder to most of the college who have had difficulty passing Freshman Trigonometry, has for its aim the deeper mysteries of Mathematics. A meeting is held about once a month and various members of the society have special subjects for study. Dr. Graustein of Harvard led one of the most successful evening programs.

Barnswallows Association

The Barnswallows Association, commonly known as Barn, under the leadership of Ellen Bartlett, has shown more progressive activity this year than it has shown in four years. In the fall the new constitution was officially inaugurated which changed the membership regulations; although the whole college is now, as before, eligible to associate membership, only those members of the undergraduate body who are accepted by a try-out committee as competent for active membership are eligible for active part in the dramatic productions given by the association. This does not detract from Barn's membership dues, and adds a reliable and actively interested nucleus to call upon for the five customary performances given by Barn, and for any extra occasions that may arise. The try-out committee who chooses the active members is composed of the president and vice-president of the association, the coach—this year, Mrs. Hunt—and the chairman of plays, chosen by the executive board. The number of active members is limited to forty, and the board reserves the right to drop any member who proves uninterested. This plan obviates the necessity for continual try-outs, always a strain on the college, and more particularly on the committee who have charge of them. This year the second try-out was used only for operetta, taking a number of extra girls for that event without disturbing the original active membership.

Besides the structural change brought about by its new constitution, there has been a noticeable advance in standard, both of the quality of plays given, and of finish in presentation, instigated without doubt by the purpose expressed in the constitution, "to make public dramatic events at Wellesley set a high standard for the community by enlisting the college in the artistic production of plays." With this in view they have presented this year, at the fall informals, Rosalind, by J. M. Barrie, The Man of Destiny, by George Bernard Shaw, and The Marriage Proposal, by Anton Tchekoff, coached respectively by Ellen Bartlett, Elizabeth Farrar, and Katherine Cast, and directed by Margaret McCarthy; for the fall play, He Who Gets Slapped, by Leonid Andreyev, coached by Mrs. Hunt, and directed by Elizabeth Auryansen; the Gilbert and Sullivan opera, Pinafore, coached by J. C. V. Lord, and directed by Harriet Parsons; another group of one-act plays for spring informals, and, in June, according to the Barn custom, which limits the June play to a Shakespearean or a classic play, a recently translated Greek comedy concerning Helen of Troy, the notorious lady so eminently in the popular limelight.

SCENE FROM He Who Gets Slapped

In presenting an operetta not written by a college student, Barn has digressed from a former custom. The executive committee had hoped to add to the operetta cast the Harvard men who occasionally supplement the choir, and had chosen The Pirates of Penzance as especially well suited for such a combination. As the plan proved undesirable, the opera was dropped. However, in view of the general Gilbert and Sullivan revival, it was decided to use Pinafore. There have been competitions before both spring and fall informals in hopes that one-act plays will be submitted that may be presented on those programs. The fact that the drama committee has not found any adequate, in its estimation, for production, should rather be taken as indication of the association's resolve to discourage amateurish and unskilled work, than regarded as an unsympathetic attitude toward students' literary attempts.

One other noteworthy attempt in Barn's yearly program was its representation by Helen Steers at the Conference on Drama held at Yale, where representatives from amateur organizations all over the country gathered to discuss general problems. One of the most active discussions concerned the question which Barn, in common with all amateur and some professional organizations is facing, whether to cater to popular taste which assures good ticket sales, or to cater to a more selective taste, producing plays of literary and artistic value. As a community professing a cultural purpose, surely the college must uphold Barn in the latter course. Due to the stimulation received from this conference, Barn decided to try for a place in the Belasco competition held yearly for amateur dramatic societies. It was an ambitious attempt; one might say it was the culminating glory of Barn's activities for the year.

The Wellesley College News

The Wellesley College News as the College weekly and only news publication, wavers between being a newspaper and a magazine. The News winces at the thought of being a Wellesley Home Journal, but tradition has kept the News from being written in a strictly journalistic style. As a chronicle of events the News often has difficulty in being interesting and entertaining, a situation often aggravated by the nature of the event, it must be said in defense of the News. The News this year, at the suggestion of popular criticism, has tried to develop a less tactful and more pronounced opinion in both its editorial columns and in the "Campus Critic" section, a department of criticism of plays, music, and art as it comes to Wellesley. Of course, this outspoken criticism, long demanded, has had a few unhappy results. The editorials in the News, unlike those in many other college papers, do not necessarily represent the majority opinion of the board. Unless the editorial is on an important issue over which there is much controversy, the writer of the editorial is stating only her own opinion. If there is a much debated issue, as smoking, the News board is usually so torn on the subject that a strong stand on one side or the other is practically impossible. Wanted a Mussolini for the Wellesley College News!

The News considers itself remarkably democratic in its organization. There is never an office dog in the News office for more than a few weeks. This situation may be changed in the future when a Mussolini of an editor will find it more efficient to really terrify into submission some junior reporters of the paper. No senior editor is entirely safe from the frank and outspoken criticism of some assistant reporter who has been on the News for a few weeks. Unlike the organization of many of the papers of the women's colleges there is no separation of the staff of editors from the staff of reporters. This division may make not only for a specialization in the functions, but in a distinct difference in the status of the editors and the reporters. The News editorial board is small, and everyone learns how to do everything,—from trying to decide on the heart of a desultory lecture to proof reading and the makeup of the paper.

The News takes great pride in its columns, Theatre, Screen, Adonais, Campus Critic, Out From Dreams and Theories, and Free Press. Boston theatres are glad to give tickets to the News, and the News is more than willing to criticize the plays and give some guidance to the numerous Wellesley theatre-goers who never read a newspaper. Out From Dreams and Theories, the vocational information column, is supplied by the Personnel Bureau, and is perhaps most interesting to the seniors to whom are shown opportunities and limitations of certain careers which have seemed interesting and appropriate to their peculiar talent. The Free Press column, open to everyone who wishes to write a letter which will reach a large Wellesley group, has its moments when the College is violently heated and divided on a question. As a matter of principle, the Free Press column will not print any personal libel, but is often suspected of preferring a libel suit to decorous oblivion. The Campus Critic with its signed criticisms is the department of amateur criticism. Members of the board interested and having some technical knowledge of music or art are given the recitals or art exhibits. For the annual concert series, sponsored by the Department of Music, there is a student critic who is not on the News board, but whose knowledge of music and literary ability give her reports a flavor which no member of the News board thought herself capable of attaining.

The Literary Supplement of the Wellesley College News, with its own staff, has been for a number of years the only magazine which Wellesley has had. In the pages of The Literary Supplement have been published poems, essays, and short stories of the dim and shining literary lights of the College. For years, however, The Literary Supplement has been handicapped by small-type, newspaper column form which gave the magazine a peculiarly uninviting appearance. The News and The Supplement after a number of financial manoeuvers were pleased to change the form of The Supplement into a blue-covered magazine. Now Wellesley really has a magaine, The Literary Review of the Wellesley College News. Under its new form The Literary Review has developed several departments; Art Review, Music Review, and Book Review. It is in the introduction of this new form of the old Literary Supplement that the boards feel they have made their biggest advance this year.

Press Board

The photography department of the Press Board has proved during this, the first year of its existence, a success. Until the establishment of this department, pictures to accompany news and feature stories were handled by professional photographers. This proved inconvenient, expensive, and unsatisfactory. The Press Board determined to rid itself of this nuisance and purchased a fine camera. Miss Elizabeth Rogers has managed the photography for the publicity office, and, after a year's trial, has proved that she is capable of filling the place of the professional photographer. The Wellesley Press Board is the only one of the fifteen college publicity departments meeting at Mt. Holyoke this fall, which handled its own photography.

Wellesley was represented at the annual conference of college Press Boards by Dorothy Dunham. Fifteen colleges were represented at the conference, where the discussion centered largely on the question, whether or not colleges should send free publicity to the newspapers. It was generally agreed that college items have real news value in that a large proportion of newspaper readers are in some way affiliated with a college or colleges, and are interested in all college news. Furthermore, colleges have no need of, or desire for advertisement. Wellesley Press Board has always followed the policy of payment for their contributions.

Since Wellesley College has no department of Journalism, students interested in newspaper work will find their best opportunity for study and practical work as members of the Press Board. The writing and connections made with newspaper editors prove of very great value as training for future work in Journalism, as is shown by the number of ex-Press Board members who obtain positions on city papers after graduation. Miss Johnson, the director of the Publicity department of Wellesley of which the Press Board is a part, aptly sums up the advantages of working on a college press board when she says: "The training given by Press Board work is valuable because of the direct contact with city newspapers; some realization of what it means to hold a job which is paid for according to the satisfaction rendered; and experience in expressing ideas in a way which will make the public, represented by the newspaper readers, pay attention to them. Moreover, newspaper reporting means diligence, mental alertness, and the development of initiative,—valuable training for any vocation."

Wellesley College Choir

The choir or Choral Club as it is now called, has flourished since its amalgamation with the Glee Club a year ago. This change was brought about after two years of careful sounding of students' opinions and desires by Professor Macdougall. He had wanted to increase the size of the choir to about that of the Smith and Mt. Holyoke choirs—that is, between seventy and eighty members, which it now has—and to strengthen and invigorate the Glee Club which was rapidly deteriorating to a mere excuse for holding a dance, as they themselves admitted. This assimilation, by which both the choir and Glee Club have greatly benefited, was very simply brought about, as soon as Professor Macdougall had ascertained that both organizations were willing to try the new arrangement, by inviting all the members of the Glee Club to join the choir without trial. With the exception of not more than four or five, the entire Glee Club accepted. This immediately swelled the choir to double its original membership, making much richer possibilities for the special vesper services, such as were held before Thanksgiving, before Christmas, and at Easter when the whole of the new choir was used. For ordinary services only half the choir is employed. Since the work is distributed between two sections, the requirement of attendance at two services every Sunday has been lightened by half.

The Glee Club, on the other hand, has not only been enlarged, but has taken an entirely new lease on life. Its members are now under the same strict regulations as the old choir—they must have a full rehearsal at least once a week—and, furthermore, are getting continual practice in the ordinary choir routine. They have begun to sing seriously, as Professor Macdougall says, and consequently have already evolved a very presentable chorus. They are undertaking more concerts than before, having three this year to one last—all of them flatteringly successful. Professor Macdougall asserts that many more of the men's colleges are clamoring to sing with us than we can accept, and that he has had a most difficult time limiting this year's program to the three which he finally selected—Princeton, Wesleyan, and Bowdoin. There are many difficulties in running such concerts, the selecting of programs constituting a large one, which limit the number that can conveniently be managed during a year. Professor Macdougall as always worked hard to make them successful, and deserves much credit for the smoothness and finish of the performances given under the new arrangement. They have been enjoyed by the whole college as well as by the Choral Club, and have proved fairly remunerative.

The organization of the Choral Club consists of a business committee of which Dorothy Wegener is chairman, Louise Hall, Dorothy Williams, choristers, and Katherine Hobbie, the other member, who work with Professor Macdougall in making plans and attending to the business details of the organization. This year the members of the former Glee Club decided to add their treasury to that of the former choir, although they were not under any obligation to do so, thereby augmenting the Three Sisters Fund founded by Miss Hazard, former president of Wellesley College, and her two sisters, Mrs. Nathaniel D. Bacon and Mrs. Irving Fisher, in 1900 to start and support a choir in Wellesley, which has been until now the whole treasury of the choir. This money is used mainly for music, but has been used, as it was for Christmas vespers, to pay for supplementing the choir with instruments, or, as it was used in a few of the other special musical vespers during the year, to get a group of men from Harvard to sing with the choir, or, as in the special case of the Beethoven festival, when Professor Macdougall engaged the Elshuco trio as part of the Wellesley celebration.

Looking back upon this year, the Choral Club may in all justice look forward to prosperity, for it is already running with the regularity of the former small choir, and yet has many more possibilities for development in group singing because of its much larger membership. It is impossible to review the choir, or the Choral Club, without emphasizing the fact that its success is due to Professor Macdougall. The choir was formed under his instigation and direction; his ambitions for it have carried it forward. By constant work, he has been its organizer, director, and executor in one.

Wellesley College Symphony Orchestra

Besides its annual concert given in April, the orchestra this year constituted part of the program arranged by Professor Macdougall to celebrate the centennial anniversary of Beethoven's birth. The orchestra, as well as the choir and the members of the music department who assisted in the program, indicated an unusually wide and alert interest in the outside musical world by thus participating in the general commemoration of Beethoven's birthday. In arranging a Beethoven festival at Wellesley, Professor Macdougall "put Wellesley on the map," as he said. That is, he raised the scope of the Wellesley musical organizations and the music department to an equal basis with that of the whole musical world. This festival was particularly advantageous to the orchestra, because it gave that much neglected organization an opportunity to come under the attention of the college in addition to its one annual concert.

It is true that the orchestra has been undeservedly slighted by the college with the exception of the faculty, who have taken an interest in its progress, and the members themselves. To the latter it has proved a worth while enterprise from the point of view of the practical experience gained from playing together, as well as from that of the enjoyment gained from playing good music. Of the four seniors, two, Virginia Allen, the manager of the orchestra, and Lydia Webber have been active members for four years, and have enjoyed the work. The other two seniors, Barbara Pike and Marie Fritzinger, taken in this year, have proved valuable members. The orchestra as a whole acknowledges its gratitude and indebtedness to Mr. Foster, its faculty leader, for the interest he has taken in it, the time he has put on it, and the instruction he has given it. The orchestra members hope that the number and variety of instruments may increase in the next year.

1927 Class Songs

Class Song

Wellesley Twenty Seven, voices
Tuned in harmony,
Lift our song of true devotion
In a call to thee:
Put within our lives a spirit
While our hearts are young;
Let it fire us into courage
That from faith is sprung.
'Neath thy inspiration moving
Love will dare unto the skies;
May we in that spirit, Wellesley
Twenty Seven, rise.

Words by Ellen Douglas Gordon.

Crew Song

Into the glow of the sunset,
Into the gold of the west,
Over the flame-tinted ripples,
Leaping each amber-tipped crest,
Fair Kilohana speed onward
Swift as a meteor in flight!
Waban, an opal of fire, burns—
Mirrors thine image of light.

Twilight falls vainly upon thee.
Shadows thy light may not hold,
While in the darkening waters
Amethyst blends with the gold.
On to thy goal, Kilohana!
Now from the shadowy shore,
Hark! the glad cry, "Twenty Seven,"
Echoes the dip of thine oar.

Words by Violet C. Graser.

Marching Song

We'll march onward, Wellesley,
Ever we'll be,
Fair Alma Mater,
Loyal to thee.
Hail! all hail to Wellesley!
Hail! we sing to thee.
Marching on, Twenty Seven,
True to they call, Wellesley.

Words and Music by Violet C. Graser.

Wellesley College Athletic Association

This year for Athletic Association has meant revision and renovation from the blazers to the constitution. The old white blazers with the blue trimmings were considered not much more serviceable than the old constitution.

The chief changes in the constitution to bring it up to date and simplify the workings of the Athletic Association are important. The time of installation of officers is immediately before the Spring Sport season in the middle of April instead of in the fall. This change entails Junior Heads of Sports. With this new plan the board installed in the spring has experience in co-operation before the freshmen arrive in the fall, and may embody in the printed Rules and Regulations any change in policy which may be wanted.

Ex-officio members of the Executive Board, more carefully defined this year, include instructors in sports and a representative from News. All Athletic Association business and legislation is in the hands of the Executive Board. Ammendment power is a function primarily of the Executive Board, but if there is general disapproval, the decision will finally be with the active members.

Rules and Regulations, the hand book of the Athletic Association, has been entirely revised with charts and with new headings and sub-divisions to make it clearer and more simple. In the next Rules and Regulations there will be incorporated the new requirements for the blazers. The point system has been abolished because of the triviality and the inequality of the points, and a blazer will now be awarded for continuous activity in sports for at least three college years. The sportsmanlike attitude in every phase of college life will be considered. The new blazer is dark blue with a blue and gold Wellesley seal, W. C. A. A. insignia, and the class numerals. The problem of placing the freshmen is one of the most difficult of the year and needs experience. The printed policy will make for less confusion than any posted or verbal directions.

The Winter Carnival in spite of several postponements was held with success on the night of February 22. Great search-lights were attached to the walls of Severance and a hurdy-gurdy was hired for the occasion. In addition to the skiing, tobogganing, snow-shoeing, and the annual snow fight between Campus and Village there was revived this year the skijoring stunts.

and now we're after an "M. A."!

This year, Slattery gets its degree. Four years of study—of the wants and needs of Wellesleyites! Our diploma? The good will of Slattery graduates—past, present, and (we hope) to come!

We're conscious of the implications of that "to come." So conscious that our Wellesley Shop manager, herself a Wellesley graduate, confers constantly with Wellesleyites before she makes her own selections for the shop. No wonder, the Slattery business grows at Wellesley! (Remember that we keep open house for alumnae, too!)

Beauty Often Comes From Within

Poor health usually results in a bad complexion and when one is suffering from that tired feeling, one cannot be vivacious and at one's best. The modern woman is maintaining her health and keeping herself fit by eating Fleischmann's Yeast regularly before meals.

For instance, Miss Anita McAleer of Denver, Colo., says:

"I have tried everything to banish acne, but the pimples always come back either in the same place or next to it. Finally I decided I would take Fleischmann's Yeast. Now after two months' use, I've only one little bump on my chin and I'm also getting rid of it with Fleischmann's Yeast."

To banish constipation, (which is a source of much ill-health) relieve indigestion, clear the skin, eat two or three cakes a day. You can dissolve it in fruit juices, milk or water, spread it on crackers or eat it plain, nibbled from the cake.
